(1)â€“(3) may be regarded as different descriptions of one and the same fact. Since that fact is in no way dependent on time, the same goes for the truth-value of (1)â€“(3). This is the sense in which truth is said to be timeless.¹ At least two things must be clear about the claim that truth is timeless.

If truth is the bottom line, then tolerance is the penultimate good. â€”The only thing I know is that God is really big,â€” said one Gen X minister. â€”The rest is up for grabs.â€” Itâ€™s a nice idea, but when it comes to capital letters, I, for one, urge caution. Believing truth is out there may make one forget that truth is in here, too ...
